EDITOR'S NOTE

"There is something about winter that brings life closer."

As the air turns cooler, routines begin to shift. Mornings slow down, evenings arrive earlier, and the spaces we return to — our homes, our families, our conversations — begin to matter a little more. It is a season that naturally draws us inward, not in retreat, but in connection.

This issue reflects that rhythm.

Across these pages, we explore what winter looks like in Zimbabwe today — how we dress for it, how we gather, and how we move through it. With Mother's Day and Father's Day at the heart of the season, we also take time to recognise the people who shape our everyday lives in ways that are often quiet, but always meaningful.

You will find stories grounded in real impact. From Nyakasikana Primary School, where small interventions are restoring confidence in young girls, to Carousel, where clothing is made locally with skill and intention. These are not separate from the Edgars story — they are part of it.

We also look ahead. Conversations around youth, growth and opportunity continue to take shape, and spaces like the upcoming UFIC Youth Camp remind us that the future is already being built.

As we continue through our 80th year, the focus remains simple: to stay present in everyday life.

Thank you for being part of it.

A WORD FROM THE GCEO

"Winter is a season that calls for consistency."

As customer routines shift, so must we — with clarity, responsiveness and a strong understanding of everyday needs. At Edgars Stores, our focus remains on delivering fashion that is practical, accessible and aligned to how Zimbabweans live. This season, that commitment continues across our business.

Through our retail brands, we are focused on offering products that meet real needs, while maintaining quality and value. Through Carousel, our manufacturing division, we continue to strengthen local production capabilities — ensuring greater control, efficiency and contribution to Zimbabwean industry.

Our responsibility also extends beyond retail. Our engagement at Nyakasikana Primary School reflects a continued commitment to supporting communities in meaningful ways. These initiatives are not separate from our business — they are part of how we define impact.

Looking ahead, we remain focused on the next generation. Platforms such as the UFIC Youth Camp create important opportunities to engage young people around growth, discipline and possibility.

As we move through our 80th year, our direction remains clear: to build a business that is relevant, responsible and consistent.

We thank you for your continued support.

CAROUSEL
A Division of Edgars Stores Limited

MADE IN ZIMBABWE

Before fashion reaches the store, it begins in production.

At Carousel, Edgars' manufacturing division, garments are created with precision, skill and intention — right here in Zimbabwe. This is not just about making clothes. It is about building capability, supporting jobs & strengthening local industry. In a market where imports dominate, local manufacturing becomes more than an operational decision. It becomes a statement. And for the customer, it means something simple: Clothing made with an understanding of the people who will wear it.

WINTER, AS WE LIVE IT

Winter in Zimbabwe does not arrive loudly. It settles in. You feel it in the early mornings — in the hesitation before stepping out of bed, in the search for something warmer to wear, in the way the air carries just enough chill to slow you down. But beyond the temperature, winter changes something else: It brings people closer.

Evenings become more intentional. Families gather earlier. Meals take longer. Conversations stretch. The house becomes more than a place to pass through — it becomes where the day ends properly. It is a season that removes urgency. And in doing so, it creates space.

LADIES FASHION

WINTER, STYLED WITH INTENTION

Winter dressing is not about having more — it is about choosing better. A well-cut coat becomes essential. Knitwear moves from optional to necessary. Boots carry you through mornings, afternoons and evenings without needing to change.

The focus this season is on layering. Pieces that work together. Textures that add depth. Colours that feel grounded — creams, blacks, browns, and deeper tones that sit comfortably within the season.

But beyond the clothing, winter style is about ease. Looking put together without effort. Feeling comfortable without compromise. Because when it is cold, the last thing you want is to overthink what you are wearing.

GENTS FASHION

BUILT FOR THE SEASON

For men, winter style is at its best when it is simple and precise. A jacket that fits properly changes everything. A jersey layered correctly adds both warmth and structure. Footwear becomes more deliberate — something that can handle the day without losing its look.

There is no need to complicate it.

Winter works best when your wardrobe is built around a few reliable pieces that can be worn repeatedly, styled differently, and trusted consistently.

That is what defines the season. Not variety. But dependability.

ZITF IN PICTURES

At the Zimbabwe International Trade Fair (ZITF), Edgars Zimbabwe was awarded Best Stand in the Fashion and Textile Industry, recognising its standout presentation and innovative display.

The win highlights the brand's commitment to delivering a modern, engaging retail experience and reinforces its position as a leader in Zimbabwe's fashion industry.

HEALTH & FITNESS

WINTER MOVEMENT: STAYING ACTIVE WHEN IT'S COLD

Winter has a way of slowing everything down. The mornings are colder, the bed feels warmer, and the motivation to move is not always immediate. It becomes easier to postpone, to say "tomorrow," to trade activity for comfort. But this is exactly when movement matters most.

Not for intensity. Not for pressure. For consistency.

Staying active in winter is less about pushing limits and more about maintaining rhythm. The body responds well to routine, even when that routine is simple. A short walk in the afternoon sun. Light stretching in the morning to ease stiffness. A quick home workout that requires no equipment, no preparation, just the decision to begin.

What changes in winter is not the need for movement — it is the approach. The focus shifts from performance to maintenance. Keeping energy levels steady. Supporting circulation. Preventing that heaviness that comes with inactivity. Even small, regular movement can make a noticeable difference in how the body feels day to day. There is also a mental aspect to it.

Movement breaks the stillness that winter brings. It resets focus, lifts mood, and creates a sense of momentum that carries into other parts of the day. It does not need to be long or structured to be effective. It simply needs to be consistent.

Clothing plays a role too.

Dressing appropriately for movement in colder weather — light layers that retain warmth while allowing flexibility — makes it easier to stay active without discomfort. The goal is to remove friction, not add to it.

Winter will always invite rest but it does not require stillness. And the balance between the two is where real wellness sits — not in extremes, but in the quiet discipline of showing up, even when it would be easier not to.

SKIN & BEAUTY

WINTER SKIN

Slowing Down, Restoring Balance

Winter has a way of revealing what the skin truly needs.

The shift is gradual at first — a little more dryness after cleansing, lips that require constant moisture, skin that no longer holds the same glow it did during the warmer months. Then suddenly, the season settles in fully, and routines that once worked effortlessly begin to feel incomplete.

But winter beauty is not about reacting dramatically.

It is about understanding the season and adjusting with intention.

During colder months, the skin naturally loses moisture more quickly. Cooler air, indoor heating, hot showers and harsh winds all contribute to dehydration and sensitivity. The result is often skin that feels tight, uneven or fatigued. This is why winter calls for a different approach — one rooted less in correction and more in restoration.

The focus shifts to nourishment.

Lightweight products that worked well in summer are replaced with richer textures designed to support the skin barrier rather than strip it. Cleansers become gentler. Moisturisers become more deliberate. Hydration is layered into the routine rather than treated as an afterthought.

There is also a growing appreciation for simplicity during this season.

Winter is not the time for overcomplicating beauty. Skin responds best to consistency — a thoughtful routine repeated daily, rather than an overload of products promising instant transformation. A good cleanser, a hydrating serum, a restorative cream and daily sun protection often do more than an entire shelf of unnecessary steps.

And then there is the emotional side of beauty in winter.

The season naturally encourages slower rituals. Evening skincare becomes less about rushing through a routine and more about creating a moment of pause at the end of the day. Applying a rich cream, using warmer fragrances, taking time with self-care — these small actions begin to feel grounding.

Winter beauty also changes visually. Makeup softens. Skin takes precedence over coverage. There is less focus on intensity and more attention to finish — healthy-looking skin, natural warmth, understated elegance. Fragrance profiles deepen too, moving toward notes that feel richer and more comforting.

Perhaps that is what makes winter beauty feel so refined.

It is not loud or excessive. It is subtle, intentional and deeply personal. Because true beauty in this season is not about perfection. It is about care — the kind that restores balance quietly, over time, and allows confidence to emerge naturally.

WINTER LIVING

SPACES THAT HOLD WARMTH

Winter changes how a home is experienced.

It is no longer just a place to pass through, but a place to settle into. Rooms take on new meaning — the lounge becomes a gathering point, the bedroom a place of retreat, and even the smallest corner can become somewhere to pause. This seasonal shift does not require a complete redesign. It calls for intention.

Warmth, in this context, is not only about temperature. It is about how a space feels. Textiles become the starting point. Throws draped over sofas, layered bedding, and cushions in softer, heavier fabrics introduce comfort almost immediately. These are the elements that invite you to stay longer, to sit deeper, to relax without thinking about it.

Lighting follows.

As evenings arrive earlier, the quality of light begins to matter more. Cooler, brighter tones give way to softer, warmer lighting that settles the space. Lamps, side lighting, and even candlelight create a more grounded atmosphere — one that feels calm rather than functional.

Colour naturally shifts with the season.

Winter favours tones that feel anchored — warm neutrals, deep browns, muted greens. These colours do not dominate a space, but they stabilise it. They bring a sense of quiet balance, allowing everything else in the room to sit comfortably.

There is also value in simplicity.

A well-arranged space does not need to be full. In winter, clarity matters more than decoration. A room that feels considered — where each piece has a place — allows for a sense of ease that is often missing in busier environments.

And then there is the human element.

A home only feels complete when it is lived in. Winter creates the conditions for that — shared meals, longer conversations, time spent together without urgency. The environment supports these moments, but it is the people within it that bring it to life.

In the end, winter living is not about transformation.

It is about adjustment.

Small, thoughtful changes that turn a house into a space that feels warmer, calmer, and more connected — exactly when it is needed most.

TRAVEL

THE QUIET SIDE OF TRAVEL

Modern life rarely pauses. Notifications arrive constantly, routines become repetitive, and even moments meant for rest are often interrupted by screens, schedules and noise. This is why winter travel now offers something more valuable than movement — it offers disconnection. Not isolation — Relief.

Across Zimbabwe, there are destinations that feel designed for this slower pace of living. Places where mornings begin quietly, where conversation replaces scrolling, and where time stretches naturally instead of being tightly managed.

In Nyanga, winter transforms the landscape completely. Mist settles gently across the mountains in the early hours, softening the scenery and slowing the mood of the day before it even begins. Lodges become places of retreat rather than accommodation — spaces where people spend longer at breakfast, linger beside fireplaces, and rediscover the comfort of doing very little.

Source: Tayana Tourism

The Eastern Highlands carry a kind of calm that feels increasingly rare.

There is no pressure to rush through the experience. The beauty lies in the stillness itself — scenic drives through cool mountain air, long walks wrapped in layered knitwear, evenings spent indoors while the temperature drops outside.

Further south, Matobo offers another version of escape.

Its landscapes feel vast and grounding, particularly during winter when the skies are clearer and the silence more noticeable. The experience there is less about entertainment and more about atmosphere — uninterrupted views, quiet mornings and the luxury of space.

And perhaps that is what winter travel means now. Not excess. Not packed itineraries. But the ability to step away from constant stimulation long enough to hear yourself think again.

Even short trips begin to feel restorative in this season because the pace changes naturally. Meals are slower. Sleep feels deeper. Time spent together becomes more intentional because there are fewer distractions competing for attention.

This is the luxury winter offers. Not extravagance, but presence.

The chance to disconnect from everything demanding your attention — and reconnect with the things that deserve it.

FOOD & RECIPES

WINTER ON A PLATE

Winter introduces a slower, more deliberate way of living — and the kitchen follows suit.

There is a shift from quick meals to considered cooking. Ingredients are given time, flavours are layered, and the process itself becomes part of the experience. The kitchen warms before the meal is even served, filled with aromas that signal comfort long before the first bite.

In this season, food leans into depth. Think slow-braised meats, root vegetables softened to perfection, and velvety soups that feel refined yet reassuring. Dishes are less about complexity and more about balance — rich without being heavy, simple yet carefully composed. Winter dining, at its best, feels intentional. It invites you to pause, to sit longer, to enjoy the moment rather than move past it. Whether it's a quiet evening meal or a shared table with family, the experience is the same: warmth, ease, and a sense of completeness. Because in winter, food does more than nourish. It anchors the day.

RECIPE

CREAMY ROASTED BUTTERNUT & HERB SOUP

A refined take on a winter classic — smooth, warming, and effortlessly elegant.

Ingredients:

- 1 medium butternut, peeled and cubed
- 1 onion, chopped
- 2 cloves garlic, crushed
- 2 tablespoons olive oil
- 3 cups vegetable or chicken stock
- ½ cup fresh cream
- Salt and black pepper to taste
- Fresh herbs (thyme or parsley)

Method:

1. Preheat the oven to 200°C. Toss the butternut with olive oil, salt and pepper, then roast until tender and lightly caramelised.
2. In a pot, sauté the onion and garlic until soft and fragrant. Add the roasted butternut, followed by the stock, and allow it to simmer gently.
3. Blend until smooth, then return to low heat. Stir in the cream, adjust seasoning, and finish with fresh herbs.
4. Serve hot, with crusty bread or lightly toasted rolls.
5. Recipe: Slow-Braised Beef & Red Wine Stew

RECIPE

SLOW-BRAISED BEEF & RED WINE STEW

A rich, deeply flavoured dish that defines winter dining — refined, comforting, and made to be shared.

Ingredients:

- 500g beef (cubed)
- 2 tablespoons flour
- 2 tablespoons olive oil
- 1 onion, finely chopped
- 2 cloves garlic, crushed
- 2 carrots, sliced
- 1 cup red wine
- 2 cups beef stock
- 2 tablespoons tomato paste
- Fresh thyme or rosemary
- Salt and black pepper to taste

Method:

1. Lightly coat the beef in flour, seasoning with salt and pepper. In a heavy pot, heat olive oil and brown the beef in batches until well seared. Set aside.
2. In the same pot, sauté the onion and garlic until softened. Add the carrots and cook briefly, then stir in the tomato paste.
3. Return the beef to the pot, pour in the red wine and allow it to reduce slightly. Add the beef stock and herbs, then cover and let it simmer gently on low heat for 1.5 to 2 hours, until the meat is tender and the sauce has thickened.
4. Adjust seasoning and serve warm.

The Women Who Hold It Together

There is no single role that defines a mother.

In many homes, she is everything at once — organiser, provider, support system, constant presence. Not always loudly, but always consistently.

Mother's Day is a moment to recognise that. Not through excess, but through intention.

A thoughtful gift. Time spent together. A gesture that says more than words usually do.

Because appreciation is not always about scale.

It is about meaning.

HAPPY FATHER'S DAY

from EDGARS

The Strength You Don't Always See

Fathers often show up in ways that are easy to miss.

Through responsibility. Through consistency. Through doing what needs to be done, without needing to announce it.

Father's Day is about recognising that presence.

A simple upgrade to his wardrobe. Something practical. Something he will use.

Because the best gifts are not the ones that sit aside.

They are the ones that become part of everyday life.

BE A HERO

CREATING SPACE TO PLAY AND GROW

NYAKASIKANA PRIMARY SCHOOL DONATION

On Friday, 26 March 2026, Nyakasikana Primary School received more than a donation — it received opportunity. Through the Be a Hero campaign, Edgars Stores donated sports kits valued at US$2,500 as part of its Acts of Kindness initiative. The school was selected by campaign winner Mrs Nyaradzai Mupamhanga, bringing a strong sense of community involvement into the process. The donation responded to a real need: access to proper sporting resources. With full kits and equipment provided across soccer, netball, handball and volleyball, learners now have the tools to participate more fully in sport. Training equipment and athletics gear further expand opportunities, while the inclusion of a chess board supports development beyond the field.

The handover brought together school leadership, community representatives and Edgars executives — reflecting a shared investment in the growth of young learners.

At its core, the initiative is about more than sport. It is about participation, confidence and creating an environment where learners are able to engage without limitation.

Through Be a Hero, Edgars continues to demonstrate that meaningful impact begins with understanding what is needed — and responding with intention.

80 YEARS
MOVING FORWARD

At the beginning of the year, we marked a significant milestone — 80 years of Edgars Stores Limited. It was a moment of reflection, of looking back at a journey that began in Bulawayo in 1946 and has grown into a presence woven into everyday life across the country.

But milestones are not meant to pause the story. They are meant to continue it.

As the year progresses, the meaning of “Still Turning Heads at 80” becomes clearer. It is not about looking back with nostalgia, but about remaining relevant in the present. About continuing to respond to how Zimbabweans live, work and move through their daily lives.

That relevance is shaped in practical ways.

In stores, through clothing that reflects the season and the realities of the customer. In manufacturing, through Carousel, where local production continues to support both quality and industry. In financial services, where access and flexibility remain central to how people shop.

It is also reflected beyond the shop floor. Through community initiatives such as the Nyakasikana donation, where impact is measured not by visibility, but by the difference made. Through conversations with young people, where the focus shifts toward opportunity, growth and what the future can look like.

These are not separate efforts. They are part of the same direction. Because the strength of Edgars has never been in standing still. It has been in understanding when to adapt, when to invest, and when to listen.

Eighty years in, that approach remains unchanged. The foundation is established. The experience is there. But the focus is firmly forward — continuing to serve with intention, to evolve where necessary, and to remain part of the moments that define everyday life.

Still turning heads. Not just because of where the journey began, but because of how it continues.
